

WASHINGTON STAR

20 July 1958

Senator Jenner, Republican of Indiana: Any competent high school student who had read his history could have predicted at that time all developments in Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq today. Everything changed according to standard military principles.

"I don't think men in uniform had us up by the nose. Men in power have the right to be around in circles talking about the crisis after another when there is nothing new."

Senator Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin: We are no longer at the brink. American troops are sent in to defend with their lives the Chamoun government. From this day forward it will be virtually impossible for friends of the West to enjoy popular support or political power in the Near East. American troops are likely to be locked into this intervention for a long time, and our Government faced with the terrible alternative of a withdrawal in defeat or a perpetual occupation.
